SUCCESS STORY

Central Valley Kindergarten Center, Spokane, WA

“Advanced Dermatology wants to ‘Stop the Burn’ by introducing hats into early elementary grades (K-2) in Spokane to be worn during recess,” says nurse practitioner Kathy LejaMeyer. “Peak exposure to UVA/UVB rays is between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. Accumulation of these rays during recess, starting at young ages, can set children up for skin cancer down the road.”

“We piloted a Coolibar School Sun Hat Program coordinating with skin cancer awareness month in May and raised funds through a golf tournament. We plan to hold this event annually to make the program sustainable. The school embraced this outreach and wove in the SunWise curriculum, an EPA sponsored program, to increase awareness among the students”, says Kathy. All physicians and staff at Advanced Dermatology were pleased to sponsor this program.

Why UPF 50+ Protection Matters

UPF stands for Ultraviolet Protection Factor.

It is similar to the SPF rating you find on sunscreen, but UPF is for clothing and rates protection against both UVA and UVB waves.

Regular summer clothing allows UV to penetrate through the garment and ordinary baseball caps don't protect the ears, the side of the face and the back of the neck leaving skin vulnerable to sunburn.

The good news: all Coolibar clothing, hats, and swimwear are rated UPF 50+. This is the highest protective rating available, reserved for products that block 98% of the sun's harmful UV rays. Plus, all of our child and adult hats shade the face, neck and ears.

Where are you most vulnerable?

Your face, neck, and arms are the most susceptible to sun damage. Your best protection comes from a wide-brim hat, sunscreen and a long-sleeve shirt.

Follow these easy steps of SunAWARE to be safe.

- A Avoid unprotected UV exposure, seek shade.
- W Wear sun-protective clothing, a hat and sunglasses.
- A Apply sunscreen generously and often.
- R Routinely check skin and report changes.
- E Educate yourself and others.
